Dedication

Who o'er the assembly presides with ease
And every student strives to please?

Mrs. Larkins.

Who daily glances o'er each aisle
And greets the pupils with a smile?

Mrs. Larkins.

Who guides our thoughts and steps aright
And watches us from morn till night?

Mrs. Larkins.

Then here's to one both tried and true
Our book we dedicate to you—

Mrs. Larkins.

A Reel History

Reel 1.

In September 1920, we entered high school with a class composed of thirty-seven students. The following officers were elected: president, Carlos Hall; vice-president, Ruth Durfee; secretary, Frances Seeley; treasurer, Ada; Miss McCully was chosen class advisor. We experienced all the trials and tribulations which belong to the first year in high school.

Reel 2.

In our Sophomore year we numbered thirty. Our officers were: president, Helen Van Atta; vice-president, Vance McKahn; secretary and treasurer, Jean Wilson. The class advisor was Miss Foster, who helped us in our struggle with Caesar and his Gallic Wars. That year several members of the class showed unusual ability in athletics. The girls won the interclass championship and received the banner in basket ball. We considered that the year left us a long stride nearer our goal.

Reel 3.

"To Washington or Bust", we chose for our motto. This may not be good English but it is effervescent with meaning. It has united our class in a common purpose and taught us loyalty and perseverance; indeed it has brought us one of our greatest lessons. The officers that year were: president, Ada Ely; vice-president, Starr Northrop; secretary and treasurer, Ruth Atchison. We were under the supervision of Mrs. Larkins. Our class that year numbered twenty-eight.

Two of our members, Ada Ely and Starr Northrop, took part in the school debates. Helen Van Atta was again elected captain of the Girls' Basket Ball Team and several of our boys were prominent in athletics. In April we gave our Junior Play, "Safety First;" this event was one of the crowning achievements of the class. We enjoyed many pleasant social times, among which were the J-Hop, a sleigh ride, a sugar party and a stunt-night. This was our banner year in high school.

Reel 4.

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap", and as we have sown so have we reaped. Juniors, we did not bust. Our last year we elected the following officers: president, Ada Ely; vice-president, Helen Van Atta; secretary and treasurer, Starr Northrop; Mrs. Larkins again was supervisor. The title, supervisor, however, hardly covers the office held by Mrs. Larkins. She was the means of creating class spirit and enthusiasm and when it came to work, she was always more than willing to give freely of her time and energy. By her management and efforts we were able to reach our goal. The class is also indebted to the president, Ada Ely, for the unmeasurable devotion which she has shown. We consider her well chosen because she is the peppiest and most willing worker that we know. We began this year with the idea of raising money for our Washington trip, and more time was given to this than to social activities. We earned our money in several different ways. The tent at the Fair started our fund with a good amount; a lecture course, a Junior-Senior fair, bake-sales and selling popcorn and candy all helped us to obtain the full amount of money needed. The Washington trip proved to be very enjoyable, and we felt that our time and efforts were well spent. On May 2, 1924, the Senior Prom was given and turned out a great success. The Seniors have taken an active part in school affairs generally. In football, Carlos Hall, William Markham, Harry Lyke, Edmund Yerkes, Aaron Severance and Bruce Knowles helped the team in its struggle for the cup. In basket ball, William Markham, Carlos Hall and Bruce Knowles played. The girls who took part in basket ball were Helen Van Atta, Lela Roberts, and Hazel Sowles. There were also several of our members on the Baseball Team. Three of the class, Ada Ely, Chester Alger and Aaron Severance were on the Debating Team. Howard Helfrich, Edward Elliott, Starr Northrop and Milton Schnute produced their share of melody in the High School Orchestra.

We of the class of '24 are glad to leave our footsteps on the sands of knowledge for the coming classes of Northville High School to follow.

Starr Northrop
Helen Van Atta

Special Dispatch from Washington

(To be read at the class night program, June 1934)

Students of the Northville High School, Alumni, friends, relatives—I take upon myself the duty of explaining to you why my class, the class of 1924, is not represented at this gathering.

When I returned to this country last week from Australia, where I was sent to establish a branch of the Ku Klux Klan I stopped in Washington because I had heard that a number of my classmates were there. Our trip to Washington as seniors, must have inspired most of the class to return, for here they are in full force.

The first place I visited on stopping here was the Washington Monument. I entered and took the elevator to the top. I stepped out and, to my astonishment, looked squarely into the face of Carlos Hall, in police uniform. We greeted each other heartily and I asked him what his duty was. He said that he was stationed there to keep the children from throwing their hats from the windows. He told me Ada Ely was in to see him not so long ago, but that her name now is changed to Bloom.

Being anxious to find more of my classmates, I bid Carly goodbye and descended. As I was walking down the street I heard a familiar voice. I looked across the street and there on a sight seeing bus stood Edmund Yerkes, giving the history of the Pan-American Building. He passed out of my sight before I had a chance to attract his attention. I would like to have talked to him because it is a mystery to me why he should take such a job when he had such great ambitions.

I walked to the Capitol Building and into the Senate Chamber. I heard a manly voice, and, as I entered, the guide said that the only woman senator was speaking. I could hardly believe my eyes, for our once quiet Marie Van Valkenburgh had the floor, and she was pounding the desk and shouting lustily.

I soon left the Senate and hastened on my way. I visited the Supreme Court, and the case before it was the breach of promise suit of Ethel Hodgson against Edward Elliot. I felt grieved that such a happy romance as this promised to be should end in such a way. I looked over the judges and my heart gave a jump, for sitting there in his robe and all his dignity was my old friend, Bill Markham. I nearly wept for joy to find that at least one of my classmates amounted to something.

I left the court with joy in my heart and, walking down the corridor, I thought I beheld a familiar face at the head of a large group of boys and girls. As he drew nearer I yelled for joy, for it was Aaron Severence. We talked a minute, and he said that he was conducting a tour to Washington. He added also that he had made Lela Roberts his lawful and wedded wife, and they were living in Salem. The school children were getting restless, so he passed on down the hall.

I walked down the stairs and whom should I see but Harry Lyke—polishing the brass rails? I stopped and we chatted for quite a while; in the course of our conversation he told me that Hazel Sowles and Ruth Atchison were running a hospital for pet animals.

After I left Harry and was walking down Pennsylvania Avenue I saw a large crowd in front of a small store. I walked over, and there in the center of the crowd was Howard Helfrich, auctioning off second hand furniture. There was such a mob around him that I couldn't get close enough to speak to him. I listened for a while and finally pushed my way on up the street.

I next visited the National Museum, and at the door whom should I bump into but Bruce Knowles! He has the responsible position of checking cameras. He told me that his doctor forbade his doing heavy work because of his frail condition.

I began to think it was queer that I hadn't seen Chester for he used to seem such a promising young man. So I asked Bruce about him and he told me that Chester was traveling with Barnum and Bailey's Circus, as the only wild man in captivity. But he also said that when Chester was not working he had five or

The Student Council

The Student Council of the Northville High School is a group of students chosen from the student body by general school vote, to handle all business matters pertaining to school activities. The business is carried on in a strictly business-like way, thus giving the members excellent training in parliamentary law. Their duties are to sanction all school parties, take charge of money brought in by school athletics, buy necessary athletic equipment, oversee school property and fine or punish any person willfully destroying either building or grounds. All bills must be approved by the council before being paid.

There have been held, up to the present time, twenty-five meetings. The council meets on Tuesday morning of every week.

At the beginning of the school year the following students were elected as members of the Student Council: President, Chester Alger; business manager, Ada Ely; girls' commissioner of buildings and grounds, Ida Rose Cavell; boys' commissioner of buildings and grounds, James Wood; girls' athletic manager, Helen VanAtta; boys' athletic manager, Carlos Hall. Mr. A. J. Helfrich served as faculty advisor.

The first all-school party of the year was given by the Student Council at Halloween time.

The Sophomore-Freshmen stunt night was supervised by the Council, initiations having been done away with the previous year.

The Council so far this year has handled approximately nine hundred dollars. It has succeeded in clearing up all back debts and at the present time has money in the bank. It hopes to leave, from the baseball returns, an even larger account at the bank than it has at the present time.

Debating Team

The Debating Team of Northville High School received five points for this season.

Much interest was shown by members of the team in the subject: "Resolved that the adoption of the ship subsidy plan would be a wise national policy."

Debates were held with the following schools:

Redford	.....	November	26
Holly	.....	January	4
Plymouth	.....	January	19
Belleville	.....	Forfeited

During the season several debates were held with neighboring schools which not only added interest and enthusiasm but also aided the individual members of the team.

Those who are to receive letters for debating are: Ida Rose Cavell, Reeva Schrader, Ada Ely, Chester Alger and Aaron Severence.

Of the team, Ada Ely the captain, is the only one to have debated two years for the school. We are agreed that Ada's natural ability and her skill gained by experience make her the equal of any debater whom we've met, and had her team been as experienced as it was enthusiastic we feel sure that she would have captained us to victory.

As a team we feel that we owe much to Miss Aletha Yerkes, who gave her time and efforts so unsparingly to our interests.

Dramatic Club

The Northville High School Dramatic Club was organized in January, 1923, after giving the play, "The Return of Christmas." The original members, those who took part in the play, were: Kathryn Wilcox, Kathleen Juhl, Reeva Schrader, Raymond Watts, Ralph Conner, Carlos Hall and Cecil Fry. The following officers were elected: president, Reeva J. Schrader; secretary and treasurer, Kathryn Wilcox; publicity agent, Ralph Conner; and property manager, Cecil Fry, with Miss Whipple and Miss Aletha Yerkes as supervisors.

Two other plays were given that year under the direction of the Dramatic Club, "Joint Owners In Spain," with four girls taking part: Catharine Harlan, Ida Rose Cavell, Kathryn Wilcox and Reeva Schrader, and "A Proposal Under Difficulties," with four boys taking part: Raymond Watts, Ralph Conner, Leo Wood and Ralph Wood.

On January 15, 1924 at the Junior-Senior Fair the Dramatic Club presented "Nevertheless," a dramatic interlude, as its part in the activities.

Soon after the play the Club voted to take in several new members: Ida Rose Cavell, Catharine Harlan, Averell Henry, Leo Wood and Frank Conner. On March 24, Ida Rose Cavell and Frank Conner were initiated.

An organization of this sort is entirely new here and it is the hope of the present members that it will be carried on indefinitely.

Reeva J. Schrader, President.

Delbert Campbell, Howard Helfrich, Harry German, Edward Elliott
Milton Schnute, Starr Northrop, Albert Kohler

High School Orchestra

Due to a rather late start the orchestra has not done as much this year as might have been expected. We have played at various entertainments, including the physical training demonstrations that have been given in the high school gymnasium.

The orchestra is now composed of the following: Harry German, Starr Northrop, Albert Kohler, Milton Schnute, Delbert Campbell, Edward Elliott and Howard Helfrich. Under the directorship of Mr. Helfrich this organization has improved rapidly since its birth last year.

We greatly appreciate the help that has been given to us by the following people: Charles Altman, Miss Irene Olson, and Miss Reeva Schrader, Carl H. Bryan.

FIRST ROW

Albert Killett, Kenneth Van Valkenburgh, Alvin Hotaling, Gerald Roberts, William Allen.

SECOND ROW

THIRD ROW

Robert McCardle, Elsworth Cramer, Earl Markham, James Wood (Assistant Scout Master) Lawrence LeFevre, Jack Marburger, Franklin Knight, Thomas Freeman.

The Boy Scouts

The Northville Troop of Boy Scouts of America was organized about seven years ago.

Mr. Pomroy, a scout master from Detroit, came out and organized our troop, and held meetings once every week until the troop was well under way and able to take care of itself.

Mr. Wallace E. Ross of Northville then became scout master and has served ever since the early organization of the troop. Much credit is due Mr. Ross for his devotion, work and patience with the boys.

The scout troop has been a wonderful thing for the boys of Northville. Every boy now looks forward to the day when he will be twelve years old and can join the scouts. The scouts have also been very beneficial to the community, helping every one who desires their assistance; it is their aim to do a good turn every day. They are of great assistance during Fair time every year because of the willingness and skill with which they performed the duties assigned them, such as parking cars, holding the crowds, doing police work and running many errands.

They learn many useful things, such as first aid to the injured, signaling, fire building and cooking.

Merit badges are given in engineering, mechanics, surveying, electricity, radio, medicine, public health, surgery and forestry to any boy who is interested in any one of these subjects and passes a test in it.

The boys learn many useful things and receive good training and physical exercise in the games and out door life. A Boy Scout troop is needed in every community; and every town, village and city should have one.

We therefore hope that the people of Northville will back their troop and help make it bigger and better than it has ever been before.

Music and Drama

Pocahontas

On Wednesday evening, March 19, the comic operetta "Pocahontas" was presented at the Alseium Theater by the High School Music Department. A good sized audience greeted the players and all thoroughly enjoyed the entertainment.

The parts were well assigned, costumes very attractive, solo parts were well rendered and the chorus work was especially good, each adding to the success of the operetta, which proved to be one of the most pleasing entertainments ever given by our High School.

Those who portrayed the principal characters acted their parts in a most praiseworthy manner; they were the following: Ida Rose Cavell, "Pocahontas"; Rex Shuart, "Pow-hat-on"; Gordon Crouch, "John Rolfe" and the prophet "Enos it all"; Cecil Fry, "John Smith"; Bruce Knowles, "A-Hum"; Virginia Smith, "Ah Meek" and Ruth Yerkes, "Queen Anne."

Miss Irene Olson, our supervisor of music, and Miss Aletha Yerkes, public speaking teacher, directed the operetta and are deserving of considerable praise for their untiring efforts, as a great deal of time and patience was required to bring the play to a successful finish.

Between acts the male quartet sang two numbers which delighted all.

Rainbow Inn

For sometime the Seniors have been very much in evidence but now they have stepped back to have their places filled by the class of '25. The Juniors have made one big leap and brought themselves before the public, establishing such a reputation overnight that they will have to keep on the jump to live up to it. On May 7, before a well filled house, they presented their class play, "Rainbow Inn". A comedy is a very difficult thing to put over. It takes something really funny to make a critical audience laugh. Perhaps you can judge to a degree, their success when I tell you that the audience was laughing all the time with scarcely a let-up for even the more serious parts.

The setting of the play was at Rainbow Inn, a summer resort on a lake. At the time of the arrival of Jimmy and his chum from college a rival inn was taking most of the business, a mortgage was coming due and there was no money to pay it. Jimmy and his chum took charge immediately and their clever advertisements brought an on-

“POCAHONTAS”

AN INDIAN COMIC OPERETTA

Given by the Music Department of the
Northville High School

Wednesday Evening, March 19

Aiseum Theater, At 8:00 O'clock

The acting of the Operetta is under the direction of Miss Aletha Yerkes and the Music under the direction of Miss Irene Olson.

Two Acts—full of fun and worth while seeing.

The American setting is the story of Pocahontas saving the life of Captain John Smith, which event happens on her birthday and is the cause of a joyous gathering.

The Second Act takes the company to England to have the Queen settle their troubles and everything comes out right after many complications and much excitement.

Physical Training Department

At the beginning of the school year 1922-23 physical training was established for the boys. The girls had been having it for some time but the officers had not deemed it necessary for the boys to take it as they were more or less active and energetic outside of school.

But since physical training has been established the students sit straighter in their seats and school is not so distasteful to them, as it is a break in the monotonous book work of school life. Physical training makes the student more clearminded and alert and keeps him physically fit, and when physically fit a student is better able to do justice to his studies.

Last year Mr. Harold Ensing was physical director of the boys and Mrs. Ida Cooke of the girls. An exhibition was given and was well attended.

The Physical Education Department has grown extensively. New equipment has been bought and inter-class sports started. At the end of the year the class with the largest number of points will be awarded a penant or cup.

This year Mr. and Mrs. Miller are directing physical education. In November an exhibition was given in which there were many apparatus demonstrations on parallel bars, elephant, and mats. There was military marching and calisthenics by the boys, and dumbbell and Indian club drills and clogging by the girls. The fifth and sixth grade girls gave an exhibition of figure marching that was very attractive and the other grades also did their bit. The exhibition was very successful and the townspeople went away with the opinion that physical training was a good thing and just as necessary for their children as any other subject.

Another exhibition will be given in April in the form of a circus and we hope it will be as successful as the other one.

A. K. MILLER, Coach

EDWARD RILEY, Captain

Coach Miller called for football candidates on September 7, and about thirty-five men responded to the call, all eager to obtain a position on the squad. Although there were only six experienced men, some very good material was developed in the first few practices.

The first game of the season was played on our home field, with Belleville. Although there had been but a week of practice we very easily carried off the honors.

The second game of the season, with Plymouth, was played here during the Northville Fair; this was a walk-away for Northville.

The next game was with our old rival, Farmington. The score stood, at the end of the third quarter, 0-0. But because of our players' skill with forward passes, we won.

We next went to Birmingham, with all the dope against us. Instead of being discouraged we kept up our pep and Bill Markham saved the day with the only touchdown.

The fifth game was played at Redford on a cold windy day. The game ended 7-6 in favor of Northville; Riley made the only touchdown.

Dearborn came to Northville in the rain, and it continued to rain through the whole game. However, it takes more than a little rain to keep Hall and Crouch from working forward passes and we won with a score of 30-0.

The game at Wayne was a fight from start to finish, ending in a tie, 12-12, Captain Riley making both touchdowns.

When we went to Howell we had a great disappointment, losing our first game. Knowles, intercepting one of Howell's forward passes, ran fifty yards for a touchdown; however in spite of this good work, we were beaten 19-6.

The last game of the season was played at Wyandotte. Northville was outweighed ten pounds to the man by the down river men. After putting up a good fight, the game was lost 14-0.

This was the most successful football season in some time, since we lost no League games and were tied in but one. Due to the fact that we unknowingly played an ineligible man in one half of the Plymouth game, we were forced to forfeit to them, giving them the championship.

Girls' Basket Ball

MRS. A. K. MILLER, Coach

VIRGINIA SMITH, Captain

The basket ball season for 1923-24 looked very promising at the beginning. Mrs. Miller, our coach, had six letter players back, Helen Van Atta, Virginia Smith, Marjorie Horan, Barbara Blackburn, Luella Riley and Madeline Lauray, with Virginia Smith acting as captain.

The first three games were won easily and served for the most part as practice games. After these our games were harder ones, but during the entire season we suffered only two defeats, thus winning second place in the league.

The forwards, Virginia and Helen, were not surpassed in the league for scientific and clever team work. When they got their hands on the ball the team was always sure of two more points

The centers, Marjorie and Barbara, were very fast and also showed great skill in passing. As Marjorie generally got the tip off, the centers had no trouble in passing the ball to the forwards.

The guards, Luella and Madeline, held our opponents down to low scores by their fighting spirit and skillful guarding.

The reserves, Lela Roberts, Vivian Taylor, Frances Hall, Lucile Wickham and Hazel Sowles were always ready to fight when put in the games.

Mrs. Miller, the coach, deserves much credit for the success of the team this season. She was always willing and ready to spend her time in helping us to work out difficult plays and she proved her ability as a good coach.

The games were as follows:

Dec. 7	Northville	46	Walled Lake	10
Dec. 14	Northville	39	Milan	0
Jan. 4	Northville	57	Pontiac	8
Jan. 11	Northville	31	Plymouth	22

Basket Ball

A. K. MILLER, Coach

WILLIAM MARKHAM, Captain

Shortly after the football season closed, a call for basket-ball candidates was sent out. A large number of men turned out. After a few weeks of hard practice the first team to represent Northville High School was picked and also a second team. A captain was elected and we were ready to begin the season with four men from the preceding year.

William Markham, (Bill) was elected captain and was also our center. In jumping he was not excelled and was a fast floor man.

Harry German (Lena), our right forward, was always where the ball was and was a sure-shot basket maker. Harry could be depended upon to do his best at all times.

Edward Riley (Riley), was our left forward. He always out-played his opponents and when the ball was passed to him it meant two points for Northville.

James Wood (Jim), was our standing guard and you could count on him to block his opponents' shot at the basket. Jim's best trick was to catch the ball in the air on its way to the basket. He was very good at foul shooting, missing only one foul the whole season.

Carlos Hall (Carly), played running guard; he was a fast man covering the floor in good shape, and had a good eye for baskets.

Bruce Knowles (Nodes), was our utility man. He made a good showing wherever he was placed and as a basket maker he had to be watched very closely.

We also had Clifford LeFevere (Butch), as standing guard. He played a fast game and never failed to get his man. Butch made no false moves and always got the ball out of his territory before the opponents could follow up their play.

Gordon Crouch (Squat), was our forward, a fast, scientific player. He was very good at shooting baskets and at foul shooting was not excelled.

Kenneth Edwards, another forward, had a good eye for baskets and could be depended upon at all times to do his best. Great things are expected of him next year.

After a very successful season which brought us third place in the Suburban League, the team enjoyed three days at the District Class C Tournament at Ypsilanti. We were defeated by Milan in the semi-finals by the close score of 16 to 14. The game was considered the fastest and most exciting of the tournament.

For our training and great success in basket ball we are indebted to A. K. Miller, our coach, who spent many hours in patient and tedious work to make the team what it should be and keep up the standard of playing.

Boys' Basket Ball

Base Ball

A. K. MILLER, Coach

HARRY GERMAN, Captain

At the first indications of spring, gloves and mits, balls and bats began to appear, and by the time Coach Miller issued the first call for candidates for the team, considerable enthusiasm had been worked up, and the same pep and eagerness that had featured in the success of both football and basket-ball, early manifested itself on the baseball diamond.

This year we were fortunate in having seven experienced players from last year, including a pitcher and catcher. This will aid mightily in building up a winning team. Both pitcher and catcher are players of considerable experience and much is to be expected from them. The others are also players of merit, who have demonstrated their resourceful capacities on many previous occasions in base ball and other branches of athletics.

The new candidates will furnish an abundance of good material, so that with Coach Miller's instructions and discipline they will be able to fill any gap that occurs and round out the team.

The first game of the season was played with Farmington at home and it was easily won by Northville, 9 to 1. Because of the good pitching of German, Farmington made only three safe hits, and fifteen men were struck out. Jim Wood made the first home run of the season. The following was the lineup: Markham, left field; Hall, center field; LeFever, right field; Wood, first base; Knowles, second base; Fry, third base; Riley, short stop; Helfrich, catcher; German pitcher.

With this combination Northville should be able to more than hold her place with other teams.

TRACK

In past years, Northville High School has never developed a real track team. For some reason or other, track has not been encouraged as much as other branches of athletics. There seems to have been a lack of interest in the sport.

The annual track meet of the Suburban League is to be held at Northville this year, for the first time; and we hope to improve our record in track. The school has ordered new equipment, and everyone is looking forward to a successful season.

We are going to try to develop a team this year which can hold its own with the other schools competing in the meet.

Northville High has held her own in all other sports and has had more victories than defeats to her credit. However, in former years, when track was mentioned, the interest seemed to lag, and no one turned out for the team.

This year, things seem to have changed and the interest is high. We are hoping to see the first real track team here this year, and to boost old Northville High to her place in track activities.

TWILIGHT

The evening shadows are falling,
And twilight is now drawing near;
The sky in great splendor is changing
With colors so bright and so clear.
The red sunset swiftly is fading
To sweet twilights' soft golden glow,
And night breezes softly are whispering
Sweet tidings of peace, soft and low.

I gaze and my heart fills with longing
As the last fading glow lingers there,
And then to my ear come the echoes
Of night birds' sweet songs on the air.
I then slowly turn my steps homeward,
The vision is still sweet and clear;
Each night on the mountain I'm watching
As the shadows of twilight draw near.

The Relation Between the School and Its Students

If you were to ask a small child why he wanted to go to school he would probably say that he wanted to learn to read and to write. If you were to ask a student in high school the same question you would undoubtedly receive somewhat the same answer, but a much broader meaning would be hidden in that answer.

Do you go to school just to learn to read and write? I do not. Of course, the first thing that the school owes to a student is a good education, a broad education. It should give us a thorough knowledge of the fundamentals of book learning, but inspire us to get, along with this knowledge of books, the other elements of a broad education. If we are not inspired to make the most of the foundation we get in school, to put the most we have into life and to learn to get the most out of our after experiences, of what use is book knowledge?

Our teachers have done great things for America. Perhaps you do not realize it, but almost every student finds in some one of his teachers a model and this teacher may have a great influence on the life of that student. It is therefore necessary for United States public schools to employ teachers who not only have had a good college education, but teachers who have high moral standards. Teachers of the present time do not receive exceptional salaries and many teach, not for the money there is in it, but for the love of teaching and the betterment of humanity.

Schools should inspire everyone, to some degree, to help make life worth living for others, whether in one's home, city, state or nation. It should teach us respect for law and government, manners and good conduct, and last, but not least, to think for ourselves and to be able to express our thoughts.

In return for all this we should at least honor and respect our teachers and advisors, school rules and customs, and lend them the best and also any lesser talents with which we may be gifted. Each and every one of us should strive to repay those who have given us this opportunity by giving our best. By putting our best into school life we can do justice to the opportunity offered us and do justice to ourselves. It is not only by the effort and time which we put upon our lessons in Algebra, English and History that our respect for the school is measured; just as important as these are the eagerness and open-mindedness which prompt us to get something more than the day's lesson. Outside the textbooks are ideas to be formed, culture to be absorbed and self discipline to be practiced. In our general school activities these are waiting for us, as well as in the classroom.

So let us give the best of our energy, our thoughts and our ideals to our school, in class, in athletics, and in contact with the public, through our Annual and our entertainments and exhibitions.

Modern Chivalry

Once upon a time, there was a beautiful maiden, a clerk in Kresge's "Five and Ten", named Katrinka Wilhelmina Scatchandle.

One lovely day in January, Katrinka Wilhelmina decided to go for a swim in the cool green ocean; so she donned her faded purple bathing suit, with the yellow stripes, and trolled to the beach. She plunged into the cool green waves and swam out to the middle.

The water was so cooling and restful that she soon fell asleep and on awakening found that she had lost the art of swimming. She immediately shrieked a protest at the top of her voice, which the children on shore heard, and thinking it the curfew, scampered home to bed.

But one young man, Silas Hopkins, knew better and plunged into the wild waves to rescue the maiden in distress. He had gone but a few miles when he discovered that swimming would be a much simpler matter if he were wearing a bathing suit, so he hurried back to Freydl's and finally succeeded in finding one that suited him. He was arrested twice for speeding but finally got started for the ocean again.

He soon came in sight of Katrinka Wilhelmina and was about to call a reassurance when a Tashmoo-bound steamer passed between, drowning his voice and sending him back toward San Francisco.

He reached Katrinka Wilhelmina just in time, as she was beginning to get sea sick from being tossed about by the angry waves, and put a supporting arm about her.

He looked about for an interurban, and as there was none in sight, they swam back to shore.

---And Some More

It was in the days of fivvers, golf and horseshoes. Our heroine had ventured out on a rugged highway upon the sloping back of the old gray mare, who wasn't what she used to be.

The hero, brave and fearless, wishing to save the life of our fair heroine, endeavored to start his nineteen hundred and twelve model fiver to overtake her.

She was just in sight when, of a sudden, with a great sput-sput the engine groaned and stopped. After an effortless effort to start the engine he examined the gas-tank, and found,-----a golf ball. After removing the obstacle he again proceeded on his journey.

As he rounded a curve going at the terrific rate of two miles per hour, with the fair lady in sight, a rear wheel rolled down an embankment. He immediately radioed to Rears and Sawbuck who sent a second hand wheel, much the worse for wear, by the fast express.

He again resumed the search for his lady fair. As he reached her side, he drew a deep breath and began, "Oh fairest damsel, most beautiful of all women, most athletic of all athletes" and there his speech was rudely interrupted by a weighing down sensation in the region of his collarbone. As he reached up his hand encountered a piece of rusty iron which upon closer inspection he found to be a horseshoe and glancing over the landscape, he discovered an army of men pitching quoits. He threw the shoe aside, grabbed the fair damsel about the middle, planked her in the back seat of his fiver, and with a jerk started homeward.

The final close-up shows our hero and heroine calmly riding down the Avenue with the old gray mare trotting peacefully behind.

The Twin Brother

"Happy, thrice happy, everyone
Who sees his labor well begun
And not perplexed and multiplied
By idly waiting for time and tide."

The Kingdom of Incastria was about to lose its king, whose name was Angrota. For many years he had not been able to take an active part in the activities of his kingdom, but must leave it to his Prime Minister, Sargossa, while he lay in bed idly waiting for death. Angrota had two sons, twins, named Romala and Rogala, who were too young to rule in their father's place, or to stop the depredations of the tyrant Sargossa.

Finally the Kingdom broke up into petty states, each ruled by a Duke, who claimed a right to the throne. When Romala and Rogala were twenty-one their father called them to him and told them that he was dying. He said that the time had come for them to rule the kingdom. Each was to have half the loyal troops, and to reconquer half the kingdom which was divided exactly in two by the River Zangoze. They drew lots to see which one should take the East and which the West. The West, with the best of the troops, fell to Rogala, and the East, with the poorest part of the army, to Romala.

After Angrota died, and Sargossa joined forces with Duke lksal of the East, the two brothers shook hands and separated, each to face the task before him. Romala drilled his men in readiness for the campaign, and then set out against the nearest stronghold. After studying the situation he decided to strike quickly, and thus in a short time he had captured three states. He never attacked unless he was sure he could hold his position after he secured it. He knew that delay was fatal, because should Sargossa induce the Dukes to unite, he was doomed. So he continually kept up the offensive, striking first here, then there, with such rapidity that his enemies knew not how to stop him. As he saw the numbers of his army growing, because all the men he captured pledged themselves to him, and his labors well begun, and even the end of his task in sight, he was filled with joy, and decided to determine what luck his brother Rogala was having, and sent a messenger to him.

But the messenger brought back sinister news to Romala. His brother rashly attacked the strongest castle in the West at the outset of his campaign because he wanted to finish in time to help Romala. But his army was shattered, and he retreated to his father's castle with the remnants of his army. There he waited and feasted, and volunteers came to him until he again had a fine army. But he liked the ease and comfort of the castle, and decided to wait for a more favorable time to resume his campaign. But as time went on things grew worse, and a Duke named Sanfal had captured state after state until he now had a formidable army. The provisions began to fail Rogala, but the troops feared to forage unless he led them, which he would not do. They even had serious quarrels among themselves, because they had nothing to do but wait idly until Rogala thought the time favorable to strike. When mutiny threatened, Sardatus, one of his best generals, pleaded with him until he consented to attack Sanfal. But things had happened which increased his task a thousand-fold.

While his brother had been doing nothing, Romala had pressed his enemies, the Duke Iksal and Sargossa, so closely that they were forced across the Zangoze, where they soon united with Sanfal against Rogala, while he was sitting in his castle waiting for time. With his enemies gone Romala immediately organized his government, helped the afflicted people get their crops planted and destroyed homes rebuilt. After everything was in good condition he turned again to his brother.

When Rogala found himself facing such a formidable array as that now under Sanfal, his heart quaked within him and he cursed himself for waiting. But now he sought a truce, and was forced to accept their terms of joining with them, because he was helpless. Thus when Romala reached his father's castle he found his brother gone, and had scarcely enough time to get his troops safely inside the walls, before the combined forces of Iksal, Sargossa, Sanfal and Rogala approached. Romala was stricken with grief when he heard what his brother had done. And it was with pain in his heart that he ordered his men to prepare for the attack. When Sanfal found the castle occupied he was furious, as were the others except Rogala, who pleaded in vain to settle the quarrel by truce, because he was ashamed of his cowardly conduct.

For three days the attack continued, and at first it was all Romala could do to hold his position. But on the third day after a particularly hard onslaught, he ordered the gates opened and the troops led out after the enemy who were falling back. After terrific fighting Sanfal's army was completely routed, and all the leaders captured, including Rogala.

The traitors were sentenced by a military court to be beheaded. The day of the execution was dark and gloomy, but all the people had flocked together to witness it. High on a platform the heads of Sanfal, Iksal and Sargossa had been cut off by the axe-man. And as Rogala was led up to the block, all voices were hushed, and a silence like that of a tomb prevailed over all. Romala could not pardon his brother because the eyes of the people were upon him, and as his brother stood up before that vast assemblage, he turned away with a lump in his throat and the tears streaming down his tragic face. He heard a great gasp go up from the people as the axe-man raised his blade but, lo—a mist covered the body of the prostrate Rogala and the figure of old King Angrota appeared before them. As they fell to their knees, Romala heard his voice coming from a great distance saying, "Forgive him son, he did not know, and his labor grew perplexed and multiplied, because he waited for time and tide."

Everybody's Friend

"Howdy do, Ida Belle, howdy do, how's Ida Belle today? he asked in his that of an old friend of mine, by his peculiar accent, which everyone in Northville knows. The first syllable was accented and his voice gradually rose toward the end.

I turned and faced a tall, stooped man with the little black bag which is his constant companion. I looked into watery blue eyes that sparkled behind small gold rimmed spectacles.

"Hawdy do, Ida Belle, howdy-do, how's Ida Belle today? he asked in his cheery voice. "How's your grandmother? That's fine, that's fine." He paused for breath. Say, Ida Belle I never been up to your place to play my banjo yet, have I? I'll be up there some evenin' and we'll play a few tunes. Y'know I sing a little, too. There's one tune I'm particular fond of. Goes like this----." At that he began a series of noiseless whistlings which together made up such a peculiar sound that I was almost forced to laugh. "Well, got to be goin' now, good-bye, good-bye, Ida Belle."

Like the "old bear" Samuel Johnson, he seems gruff at first meeting. But if his exterior is rough it is redeemed by his inner cheerfulness and goodness at heart, and his friends look beyond the surface and see him as the good man that he is.

Fate

Steve Henry's wife was staying with her mother over the week-end, and Steve had a hard time getting his own meals and keeping house.

Sunday morning, just as it was getting light, Steve ventured out on to the porch to get the morning paper and the milk. He was just turning to go back in when a loud bang so startled him as to make him drop the milk. He hurried to the door. But it had been slammed shut by the draught, and alas! it was locked automatically, and the key was inside. Clad only in his pajamas—and it was the first of February—he soon began to shiver, and the goose pimples which rose on him made him feel like a warty toad. Deciding to try the back door, he proceeded in that direction but that too was locked fast.

With his feet half frozen and the chills chasing themselves up and down his back, he looked around desperately for some place to go. He chanced to see a heavy woolen dress on a neighbor's clothes line, and it gave him an idea. Better to do that than freeze, and he could return it as soon as he had found a means of entrance into his own house. It fitted perfectly, but was somewhat cold and stiff. He wrapped some of his beloved morning paper around his feet and slipped back into his light slippers. He next made a tour of inspection of the windows.

But the neighbor's wife had emerged to her own porch to get her paper, and, hearing a banging and rattling across the fence, decided to investigate. One glance was sufficient. There was a woman trying to break into Mr. Henry's house. She was standing on a pile of boxes trying to get a high window open. Even as the neighbor looked, the boxes caved in and the lady robber came down with a resounding thud and the echo sounded strangely like the language of a man who had pounded his fingers. In the house bolted the worthy neighbor and called Mrs. Henry on the phone, and cried frantically to that astonished individual, "Oh Mrs. Henry! a burglar is breaking into your house and he is disguised in my dress, which he has surely stolen!" Just then an extra loud rattle from across the way made her scream, "Oh dear, oh dear! I think he is already murdering your poor husband!" Next she called the police, and was so excited that she only cried, "Gang of robbers! murder! help!!—"

In the meantime poor Steve was having a pretty chilly time of it. His fingers grew so stiff he could not move them, and he decided to try the garage, but met with no success, and with a moan of agony and desperation he turned back to the house and smashed a window with his fist, then followed it into the kitchen. He opened the furnace draft, wrapped himself into half frozen comforters and blankets, and then lay on the floor over the register. Soon it began to get uncomfortably hot, but alas! he was so tangled up that he could scarcely move! He heard people running and shouts outside, and again he fought the blankets, when suddenly, crash!! over went a chair, and outside the neighbor, the whole police force and his wife agreed that there must be a desperate fight on inside. Ten police battered down the door, while inside poor Steve was almost suffocated. The police force advanced through the kitchen in battle formation, with guns drawn. Steve's wife and neighbors waited for the robber to be captured, but when nothing happened, Mrs. Steve went in to help her worthy spouse, and when she caught up to the police, they were standing in a row staring in astonishment at a flapping, steaming bundle of bedclothes on the register. Suddenly the atmosphere cleared and poor Steve poked his heated physiognomy out of the blanket puffing like a porpoise. His spouse fell on her knees beside him and began to untangle him, crying, "He's been bound and gagged by those horrid bandits!"

But the neighbor appeared upon the scene, and when she saw the woolen dress she cried, "There's the robber, I saw him break in!"

It took Steve five minutes to satisfy the police force, ten minutes to satisfy the neighbor about the borrowed dress; but it took him all the rest of the day to satisfy his wife.

Father and Son Banquet

How easy it is to do small tasks well but how different a matter to take a large responsibility and then stick to it until every detail is carried out and people say "well done." But nothing looks too big for the Seniors and no amount of difficulties can make us turn back from our purpose. It was with our hearts set on Washington that we undertook the Father and Son Banquet and made up our minds that we would make a success of it or die in the attempt. The Exchange Club had confidence in us when it put the affair in our hands and we were ready to prove that we were equal to the occasion. No army, however courageous, can win a victory without a good general. Mrs. Flora Larkins, who took command, proved every inch a general in her untiring effort in organizing and perfecting the details so that the banquet would be a financial success and the menu would please the taste of the most fastidious. Our mothers too gave us unlimited support and the townspeople who thought our cause a good one generously donated to help cut down our expenses. The menu was as follows:

OLIVES	PICKLES
FRESH BAKED HAM
CABBAGE SALAD	FRUIT SALAD
BUTTERED ROLLS
APPLE PIE	CHEESE
COFFEE	TEA	MILK

Everything was delicious and for proof let me add that plates were sent to be filled the second and even the third time. You see we had both quality and quantity. Every one seemed pleased with the dinner, and then the thing which pleased us even more was the fact that it proved a great success from a financial point of view.

The Junior Sleigh Ride

After struggling with blankets for about fifteen minutes we started from the school house and took the road to Salem. We arrived at the home of Florence Forman, a few feeling much the worse for wear. Nevertheless no one's appetite was injured in the least. But Mrs. Forman was equal to the occasion, serving us with cocoa, sandwiches, pickles and jello until we were ready to cry quits. When anyone eats a great deal he becomes conspicuous and an alibi is most comforting. Therefore Butch and Squat decided to have a race, thereby getting all they wanted to eat without seeming to be greedy, just good sports as it were. Mr. Miller was going to be judge but after watching them eat for sometime, he gave up the job as hopeless. It's a wonder that there was enough left of Mr. Miller to be a judge after the rough house he had with the boys.

Wet coats aren't the easiest things in the world to get into and it took some time, with a great deal of tugging and shouts of laughter, before we were finally wrapped up for our homeward journey. Checking up, we had three spills, just one member being seriously injured. She is still looking for her dignity.

Freshman-Sophomore Spread

How upsetting it would have been if the Freshmen had broken tradition and won from the Sophs. Although they are a sprightly bunch of children and showed lots of pep nothing like this happened and they were obliged to banquet their upper classmates. The spread was good and the party a jolly one, Freshmen and Sophomores mingling together without showing the least bit of resentment over the outcome of the contest. The Student Council was among the guests and we are sorry to say that two of its members sadly disgraced themselves and impaired the dignity of the organization by consuming a whole cake when they had been taught at home never to accept even a second piece. We all understand that growing boys have large appetites but the two people in question, (I regret to make this admission), happened to be young ladies!

We will hope that this breach of etiquette didn't make too strong an impression on youthful members of the party and that they will still be respectful to their elders despite their private opinion of their actions.

Junior-Senior Fair

The Northville Record declared in large black print "It was some Fair" and we thoroughly agree. The school building was just brimming over with amusements. In the gymnasium, booths and side shows lined the walls. The prettiest of these was the Dutch tea room where delicious salad, sandwiches, cake and coffee were served! A hamburg and hot dog stand was at the opposite end of the gym. Besides this there were a candy booth and a bake sale which tempted people with their appetizing wares. Then the side shows, the photographers' gallery, fish pond, museum, a gypsy fortune teller, a crystal gazer—and will you ever forget Butch, the snake charmer with his card board snakes? No fair would be complete without a dance and we had ours in the first floor hall. A play and medicine show were given in the assembly room and a minstrel show in Mr. Miller's room. But there is one important novelty which I had almost forgotten! We had a court with the Hon. William Markham acting as judge and Edmund Yerkes as lawyer. Ida Rose Cavell and Ada Ely did the policeman act. The four made a good team and they did a thriving business. If you didn't come to this and can't get a realistic picture of it from this write up—come next year!

Freshman Hallowe'en Party

The first event of our freshman year was a Hallowe'en party which was held in the gymnasium. Every one was requested to pass through a trail of wonders haunted by ghosts and goblins. Here even the most sedate teachers lost their dignity. The room, where we had our supper was prettily decorated in orange and black. We played games until it was time for all good freshmen to be in bed and then went home to dream until morning of witches and black cats with green eyes.

J-Hop

As the guests entered the High School Gymnasium on Friday evening April 4, they held their breath in astonishment. It was hard to believe that this world of beauty was the gym, so transformed was it from its natural self.

The first impression was that rainbows of several April showers had been gathered together in the middle of the gym. The Juniors felt amply repaid for working, many nights, into the wee hours, when the party was unanimously pronounced the prettiest ever given in Northville.

There was a large attendance and the many colored gowns harmonized well with the rainbow decorations. Delicious fruit punch was served with wafers. The cozy corners were inviting with their pale tinted lights, casting contrasting shadows. The patronesses, Mrs. N. C. Schrader, Mrs. D. P. Yerkes, Mrs. George Stanley, Mrs. C. L. Blackburn, Mrs. S. E. Cranson, Mrs. J. R. Trufant, Mrs. J. P. McCann, and Miss Dorothy Whipple, occupied one of the cozy corners and lent grace and dignity to the occasion.

Bergens Orchestra supplied tantalizing music which no dainty foot could resist.

Sophomore Weenie Roast

A weenie roast is always a very sociable affair and so we thought that it was a very appropriate way in which to begin our Sophomore calendar. The easiest time in the world to get acquainted with your fellow classmates is when your cheek is bulging while in one hand you clutch a hot dog and in the other a paper cup brimming with delicious cider. To add to the excitement and incidentally, to get our stomachs crammed to capacity, the boys and girls held an eating contest. Things disappeared like lightning, leaving a great question as to their destination; so unfortunately it had to be left undecided whether the boys or the girls were really victorious.

Coasting Party

The smallest excuse for a party is all we Freshmen need. Washington's birthday proved a convenient excuse. There happened to be a great quantity of loose snow which had fallen recently so like a jolly bunch of youngsters we piled on a bob fastened back of an automobile and proceeded to get showered with the soft white flakes. Before long we looked like living advertisements for Arctic Ice Cream. When we came back to school for our lunch our cheeks were ruddy and cherub-like in appearance.

The Junior Christmas Party

We Juniors believe in quality, not quantity. Our first party was not given until December 20, but we then made up for lost time. Dinner was served in the High School Gymnasium. Everything was delicious from nuts to ice-cream, which was a trifle late, but—better late than never. After dinner there was a short program including a vocal solo by Ida Rose Cavell, dancing by Lillian Cassie and a piano duet by Lucille Wickham and Reeva Schrader. Then came the Christmas tree, with presents galore. Mrs. Larkins received a very useful bell (we know it has good use) and Miss Whipple a miniature bath tub and cake of soap, also some—well you've heard about them—(I can't say as to the former's usefulness but we are assured of the usefulness of the latter.) A number of the boys furnished us with very enjoyable (?) musical selections upon the instruments (musical or other wise) which they received on the tree. The mistletoe which by the way, was not stationary, proved very entertaining to some, and everyone agreed that the party would not have been complete without it.

The Sophomore Valentine Party

Our valentine party was planned weeks ahead and each detail carefully worked out to make it an outstanding success. The decorations in the lunch room were elaborate and the tables with their cunning red baskets completed the charming effect. To make our appetites what they should be we went bobbing behind an automobile and along with the general good time got dumped in the snow several times. When we got back to the school house a delicious two course dinner was awaiting us, which had been prepared and was served by Miss Frances Yerkes, Beverly Terrill, Beth Ponsford, and Cecil Fry. After dinner we danced in the gym, Miss Yerkes told fortunes in the lunch room and then we spent the remainder of the evening sliding down Roger's hill. The only trouble with good parties is that they must end sometime, and the time for ours to break up came much too quickly. But we went home with the satisfactory thought that we had a peppy crowd and with Miss Yerkes' able assistance we could have other splendid parties in the future.

Freshman Christmas Party

Of course we are too old to believe in Santa Clause but we had a Christmas party just the same. We romped in the gym, until we had worked up large sized appetites, to attack the good things that awaited us in the lunch room. It's very natural for children to like surprises and ours that evening was the Christmas tree. The toys with which we were presented brought chuckles of delight and gurgles of glee. Even though we are in high school we still like things with which to amuse ourselves and it will be a long time before we outgrow the idea of wanting to carry home souvenirs.

Football Team Entertained at Lefevre's

First of all every one likes a costume party but most important of all when it's at Lefevre's because we always know before we get there what a good time awaits us. The party was given October 30, in honor of the foot ball team. Costumes always lend hilarity and the party was simply full of it. Games, singing and then the big time of the evening—lunch in the orange and black bedecked dining room. If we had been blind-folded we would have known that it was a lunch prepared by Mrs. Lefevre because of its quality and quantity. After dinner we played more games and with each flying minute the racket increased until it was almost bedlam. We made a slow procession when we climbed the stairs for our wraps because you see we wanted it to last and last and last!

Freshman St. Patrick's Party

Not only Freshmen but teachers turned out for this event for, in spite of their dignity teachers do enjoy childish pastimes for a change. They are human, although sometimes we are inclined to doubt it. Miss Moore has a faculty of making things successful and with the assistance of Irene Gotts, our president, the success of our party was doubled. It was an especially appropriate affair too, because it gave us a splendid chance to display the color which we are supposed to resemble.

Chicken Dinner for the Basket Ball Teams

The basket ball teams and their coaches, Mr. and Mrs. Miller, were guests at the home of Madeline Lauray, March 20, 1924. A sumptuous chicken dinner was served and some of them seemed to be so hungry that the after effects weren't so good. Part of the guests weren't feeling very well when they went home, but it was simply the results of too much good time.

Mr. Helfrich's Treat

On November 16th, after the last game of the season, the members of the football team met at the Ambler House for a supper given by Mr. Helfrich. All of the members of both the first and second teams were there and a jolly crowd they were, too. Besides the teams and Supt. Helfrich, Coach Miller and Assistant coach Winn were present. When all had arrived, we marched into the dining room and found places at the long table, at the head of which Mr. Helfrich sat as host. Mr. Miller sat at the other end of the table and the teams seated themselves along both sides. After a hearty meal, consisting of the following menu: dressed veal, mashed potatoes, brown gravy, bread, butter, pickles, coffee and pie, we enjoyed some good talks. Mr. Helfrich acted as toastmaster and we listened to speeches from Mr. Helfrich, coaches Miller and Winn and members of the teams, upon sportsmanship, fair play, athletics and other interesting subjects. Then to finish off the program we elected our captain for the following year and adjourned, all feeling that we had thoroughly enjoyed Mr. Helfrich's splendid treat.

Hallowe'en Masque

The annual Hallowe'en masque was quite an affair. The gym was cleverly decorated, having the proper spooky effect. Corn stalks were placed close together around the track with an occasional pumkkin peeking through. Speaking of pumpkins, ask some member of the Student Council where they got them. There is just a whisper that they were borrowed by moonlight. Orange and black streamers finished the effect, and the music—we mustn't forget that because it was Finzel's five pieces. They furnished the necessary syncopation in their usual peppy manner.

During the year we have been entertained by the following speakers: Rev. Knowles, Mr. F. C. Fisher, Dr. Ernest Burnham, Miss Melita Hutzel, Dr. Eli Forsythe, Dr. Weller and a Hindu Lecturer—even if I could remember his name I couldn't spell it.

Advice to Juniors

With our advanced years of knowledge and training we believe that it would be extremely selfish of us to keep our experience to ourselves. So with due thought to the pitfalls and dangers awaiting the Juniors, we wish to impart to them the following advice.

When the first course is served in the diner and the train is traveling with great rapidity, soup has been known to seek space outside of the dish in which it was placed. In such an event the waiter will advise you to place your big spoon within the dish, but don't stop there. Be sure to gether up all the silver ware on the table and put it in. The result will be much more gratifying.

Edmund Yerkes

The best place on the train to air the affections is on the observation platform. Be sure to avail yourself of this privilege.

Bruce Knowles.

Be sure to note the approach of all tunnels and if you do not find the inmates of your own car interesting during tunnel darkness you may find someone in another part of the train. At all events you should go on a tour of inspection. You'll be surprised at the things you bump into between cars.

Chester Alger.

Oversleep each morning so that when the porter comes to make up your berth you will be folded up with the sheets. It's most interesting.

Fink Ely.

If you wish to gain popularity with the chaperones always be late for the bus. You attract a lot of attention by so doing.

Carlos Hall
Ed. Yerkes

Be sure to lose the keys to your room and call for the bell hop to open your door. Never tip him because the look which he gives you will remain in your memory much longer.

Ruth Atchinson
Hazel Sowles

If you get locked in your rooms try all windows, the roof and the transom, if none of these avail, call loudly for police or yell "fire." This is sure to bring immediate results.

Ruth Durfee
Marie Van Valkenburgh

Collect all the silver-ware possible, tuck pieces loosely under your sweater and then standing directly in front of the bell hops the hotel manager and the chaperones quietly drop them upon the marble floor. (Seniors beware! "God help them who help themselves.")

Ada Ely

When the bell hop knocks at your door just tell him to go to h--l. He will appreciate your kind words.

Ed. Yerkes

"The Editor may toil and work
Till finger tips are sore
But there remains
Some fish to say
"I've heard that joke before" "

Jim Van Atta: "Were you ever pinched for going too fast?"
Ave Henry: "No, but I've been slapped."

Mrs. Cooke, in Botany: "Name a product manufactured from starch."
James Grissom: "Potatoes!"

Ida Rose, in French Class: "Nobody's here today."
Miss Whipple (to Donald Kerr, sitting in back of room):
"Come down to your own seat, Donald; Ida Rose misses you."

H. Helfrich: "I know its' spring because my shirts' out."

Madeline: "Why do you always slam me?"
Butch: "You always slam a door to shut it."

Clements Huff: "Did you see that girl smile at me?"
Harry Lyke: "Yes! She was too polite to laugh out loud."

Chet Alger: "Who's the meanest man in the World?"
Bill Markham: "The man who put the street light over the bridge by Marjorie's house."

Mr. Helfrich: "In what course do you expect to graduate?"
Fink Ely: "In the course of time."

Knowles (about to have his picture taken):
"Now, I don't want a large photograph."
Photographer: "All right, just shut your mouth."

CLEANING GYM AFTER J-HOP

Senior: "What do you get for cleaning up the gym?"
Junior: "Hell—if we don't."

Lena Severance: "Do you believe in love at first sight?"
Archie Alger: "No, I have astigmatism."

Ed Riley: "I am an electrician."
Carly Hall: "How come, Ed?"
Ed: "Well, the fuse burnt out up at Murph's last night and I fixed it."
Carly: "You're not an electrician you're an idiot."

Aaron Severance (after listening to a wonderful tale of modern chivalry):
"Huh! I've got a better one than that. There was a big fire, two girls were up in a twelfth story window, and no fireman was brave enough to save them. So the girls had to save themselves. A hundred foot hose was turned on them. One girl put her arms around the stream and slid down. The other girl, not desiring such a rapid descent, put on her bathing suit and swam down!"

Locker Room Blues

Hey there you, Bozo,
Get off of my clothes.
Is there any hot water?
That score was some close!
Come on have a heart, Buddy,
Lend me your towel.
Say that was some homer!
D'ya hear the crowd howl?
Say, who swiped my shoestrings?
Hey, where are my keys?
Come on, you get over,
A little room please.
Go on cut it out,
Hey you be away.
Well why in the deuce
Don't the coach let me play?
That's all right, old timer
You're good in a pinch.
Aw! shut up your noise
When d'you buy this bench?
Get out of my chair—
What d'you think this is?
Aw can that old chatter,
It's none of your biz.
Come on, get a hump on;
Gee whiz you are slow
You said something, Miller,
Come on gang, lets go.

—James Wood.

Our Annual

Every average sized high school with a live student body endeavors to publish a successful annual. Northville High School students have the pep and determination to put their annual over and put it over big. The annual is not published merely for the student body; that would be financially impossible in the average sized school, and also undesirable. The annual carries a report to the public, it gives the public a good summary of the kind of work and the kind of play, as well as the organizations, which all go to make up what is included in the term school.

In our Literary Department are included the best examples of our English class work—poems, themes and editorials. The organizations are named, what the clubs stand for and what they accomplish. Athletics are set apart in a department, and the teams and their leaders are pointed out. We show our standing among other schools in every sport in which we participate. Under Society we give a report of our good times, our parties, the social life carried on in the school. The glee clubs have been very active this year and in reading the Music and Drama reports you will call to mind the accomplishments in this line.

The annual is especially a record of the Senior Class, its activities and accomplishments. By so displaying the achievements of the Seniors, the annual serves both as a remembrancer to every Senior, of his four busy and happy years, and also as an inspiration to those classes which follow.

The annual arouses good school spirit; we all look forward to its publication. It brings the leaders to the front. A successful annual will show not only the good qualities and hard work of the annual staff which publishes it but of all those who contribute toward it.

In every annual a certain portion is set apart for advertisements. This year the money earned from the ads will go to the Junior Class which had charge of that department. This money will help the Juniors who expect to follow the good example set by the Seniors by going to Washington next year.

We, the Annual Staff, sincerely hope that this book will give you not only those things which you wish and expect to find in every annual but also a few enjoyable surprises.

Sunset and Sunrise

As the sun creeps below the horizon,
And the heavy clouds with them bring
The bootleggers of the evening,
Start the Victrolas to sing.

The stars in the heavens so high
Peep through the milky way,
For the cows are now turned out to grass,
Instead of feeding them hay.

The crows sit in the tree tops
Looking for a place to rest;
While the fishes in the brook
Are huddled in their nest.

The break of day soon follows
And the world has had its rest;
The poor fishes in the school
Are sitting at their desks.

The teachers in the class rooms
Are sitting on their thrones,
While the boys on the back stairway
Are rolling "dem" old bones.

YOU will find us ready at all times to supply you with anything you need in the way of HARDWARE, TOOLS, NAILS, SCREWS and every other article which you would expect a good hardware dealer to sell. six girls on his arms. This was music to my ears—to think that he had got over his hatred of girls.

As time was pressing I left Bruce to continue on my way. I had not gone very far down the street before I came to a hairdressing shop. I looked in and saw Ruth Yerkes demonstrating to a large crowd of women how she keeps her red hair red. As I am afraid of women I didn't dare go in to chat with her.

As I walked on down the street I saw a man coming at a great rate of speed on horse back; his face looked very familiar. As he drew nearer I recognized him as Rex Shuart. I yelled at him and he stopped, but you see he was a mounted policeman and was answering a riot call. He asked me if I wanted to go along, and so I jumped on. We reached the scene of the riot and what should we see but Ruth Durfee and Milton Schnute in the act of pulling each other's hair. It seems that they run a fruit stand together, and Ruth gave away some bananas—and Milton got most awfully mad. But they soon quieted down and we left them in a loving embrace.

I had tramped quite a bit, so I told Rex to let me off at Liggett's Drug Store, and I went in to get something to quench my thirst. To my astonishment there was Starr Northrop, slinging sodas.

We chatted for a while and then I started out again. I passed Keith's Theater and, on a large poster in front I read: "Madam Margaret Visnack will open the grand opera season here next Monday."

Being rather weary I hailed a taxi to drive me to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the driver was no other than Harland Wilcox. We talked until I reached my destination. Then I took leave of him and entered the building.

The guide took me upon the balcony and my eye lighted on the face of Clements Huff, who was printing one hundred dollar bills. Looking over on the other side I beheld Helen Van Atta counting them. I always knew that they liked money, but I never thought they would come to this.

I left the building and started for home, feeling that the class of 1924 really did amount to something, after all.

Frances Hall: "I can't understand why you stayed outside so long with such a wonderful dancer as Edward."

Ruth Sherwood: "But he showed me some new steps and we sat on them."

Mr. Winn (to boys whispering in Physics Class): "Well I see we have an E-Student conference here this morning."

Gordon Crouch: "Doesn't that girl over there look like Helen Black?"

Carly Hall: "I wouldn't call that skirt black."

Miss Whipple (to Edward Horton in Latin I): "Now Edward, don't you think you ought to turn the page? You've already translated ten lines on the next page."

FAMOUS WORDS OF THE COACHES.

"What did I tell you? Now I want you to get in early tonight."

"After this, fifteen minutes will be long enough to talk to your girls."

"Now boys close the door from the outside."

"All those with clothes on get off the floor."

JIM AND MILDRED, OUT RIDING.

Jim: "Isn't love blind?"

Mildred: "Yes, but these fellows back of us aren't. Do step on the gas!"

Hazel Sowles: "Was that a new girl you had at the J-Hop?"

Gordon Crouch: "No, just an old one painted over."

President Ada: "The motion has been moved and seconded that Mr. Camp take the pickles——?"

rush of guests. The rest of the story centers around the success of the inn, in spite of the existence of the rival, and the queer personalities of the guests. In the final scene the guests are straggling in from lovers lane to announce their engagements and the ending is one of gaily and mingled kisses and laughter.

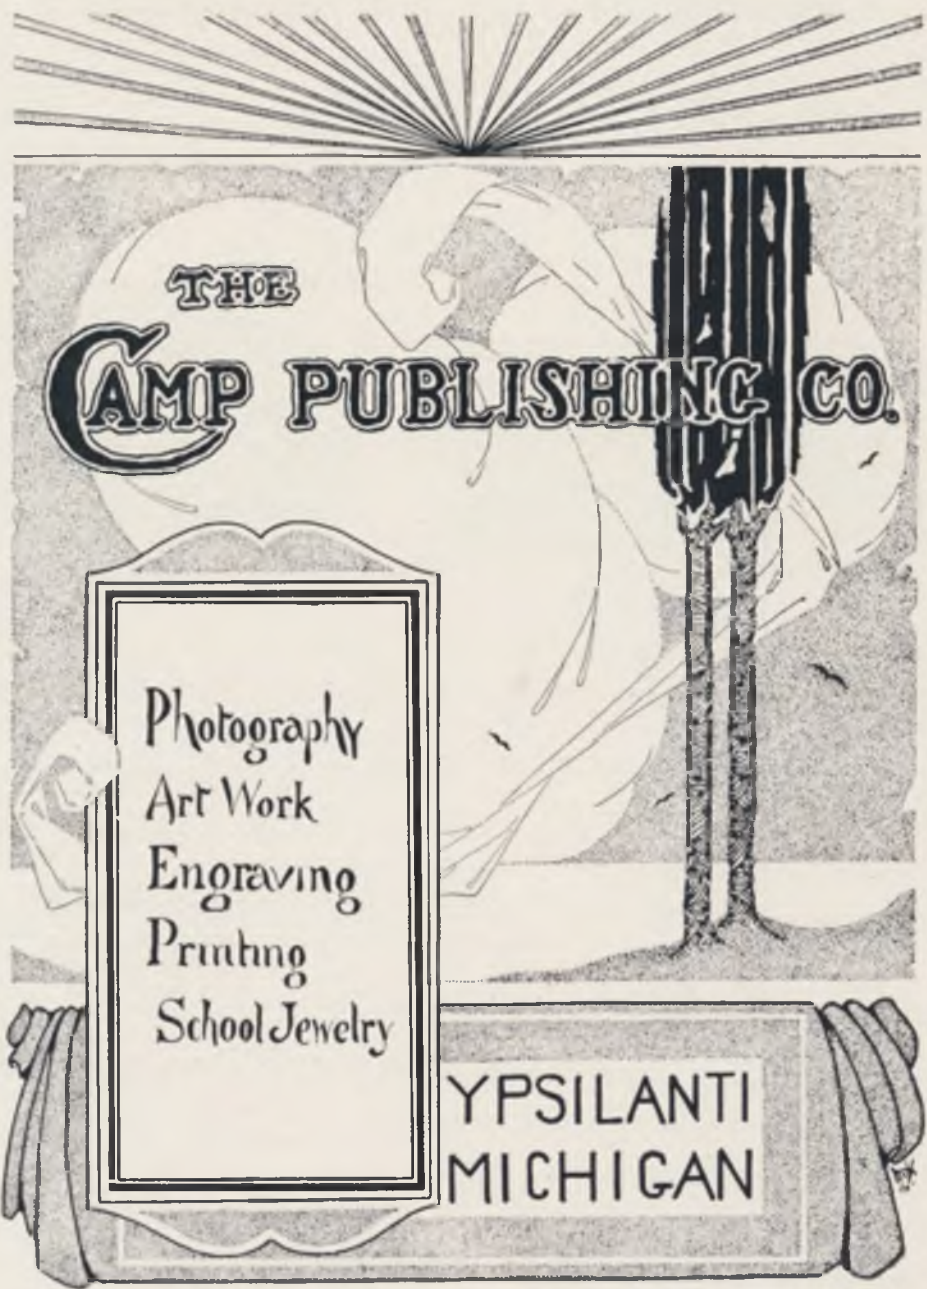

The success of the play did not depend on its plot, which was very simple, but upon the individual acting of each member of the cast.

Jimmy, with his breezy, confident manner, and his college classmates, Mort and Alice, gave the play the tone of youthful enthusiasm which so delighted the audience. Hiram Barnes and his wife, Hepsy, were true old-fashioned country folks and yet they entered into the plans of the young people and won their hearts by their genial hospitality.

In its early down-at-the-heel days, the inn would have been a sorry setting for a play had it not been for the blundering, good-hearted fun of Josh and Sally and Sam. It took no more than a roll of Sam's eyes to make the audience, especially the children, shriek with glee. However they were not the only ones who brought hearty laughs from the audience, for never was a queerer assemblage of guests seen at any hotel. Old Prof. Dinglepaugh and his kittenish sweetheart, Mehitable, were comical just to look at and caused such loud laughter that they had to repeat their speeches in order to be heard. Then there were Percy, the monocled dude, who thought he had struck Eden, and Miss Penelope Fritters, who thought Percy just about perfect.

The third act would have been of little consequence indeed had it not been for the program provided and enjoyed by the guests of the inn. With the variety of dance and songs which it featured it was very delightful and needed, to round it out, only the ugly speeches of the villainous uncle, Alonzo Fenton.

We cheer the Juniors in their success but we know that it could not have been so great a success without the capable supervision and direction of Mrs. Tinham with the enthusiastic support of Miss Whipple the class advisor. It is very seldom that some one not connected with the school takes as much interest in it as Mrs. Tinham. We owe a great deal to her for her patient coaching and loyal support.

Mrs. Larkins—Yes, if it's necessary.

Murph Cavell—Where's Ed, Anybody seen Ed?

Leo Wood—Ain't that the cats after me?

Marje Horan—Bill, oh Billy!

Coach Miller—Hey who's got my keys.

Gordon Crouch—Best we check up eh?

Lucile Wickham—Doody, doody.

Carly Hall—Hurrah—an we're all going to Washington.

Mr. Winn—Ahem, that reminds me of a little story.

James Wood—Well, well, Amen.

Howard Helfrich—Betcha' a dollar.

Reeva Schrader—Wonderful! Marvelous!! Adorable!!!

Virginia Smith—Huh? Wha'zat mean?

Laura Trufant—Hey! Go over to the pool-room and tell Allen I want him.

Fink Ely—If you don't watch out I'll "klux" ya'!

Mr. Helfrich—Let's have it quiet, please.

Mrs. Cooke—"Somebody's" going to be asked to leave pretty soon.

Ruth Yerkes—Now don't get "kippy".

Select a bed that is close to the floor and roll under, quickly, leaving a large portion of skin attached to the bed. It's always nice to leave a souvenir.

Fink Ely

Be sure not to know what street your hotel is on, mispronounce the name, then get off the bus downtown—leaving the rest of the party—and try to find your way home. There are a lot of pretty streets in Washington to walk up and down and the exercise is good for you.

Ruth Atchinson
Hazel Sowles
Ruth Yerkes

The sights seen from the upper deck of a boat on a windy day are amazing. Try this when you go to Mt. Vernon. (Sit facing the stairway)

The Boys

When you wish to take a taxi back to your hotel after a shopping expedition always select a Packard Twin Six. The cost is slight and during the ride you have a feeling of perfect enjoyment.

Ruth Yerkes

Always throw your hat from the top of Washington Monument. Pay no attention to signs saying not to. Then run all the way down the stairs. The noise is delightful. If the conductor tries to stop you, talk back to him. This makes your standing better with all the officers.

Carlos Hall
Bruce Knowles
Ed. Yerkes
Starr Northrup
Howard Helfrich
Harry Lyke

If you have a very dear friend in the class don't let him get out of your sight. Always sit down by him on the train and in the bus. There are so many wild girls running around that it is well not to take any chances.

Ethel Hodgson

Always go to bed with your clothes on because you never can tell when to expect visitors.

Girls in No. 6

If you enjoy going bare-foot in the spring you can get practically the same sensation by removing your shoes and socks and running up and down the aisle of the car. The green carpet is delightful under your feet. If people seem shocked, pay no attention. They will recover.

Howard Helfrich
Ed Yerkes

In the morning everyone should make an effort to arrive in the dressing room about the same time. You'd be surprised to see how much cosier it is and how much more quickly you can get your clothes on. Sometimes you get a few pieces that aren't yours but what's a little thing like that among friends?

General Information

Take along a good supply of mufflers for those who snore because this is very annoying especially when they have unmusical voices.

Mrs. Larkins

Boys—Be sure to take along a good natured chaperon, one who enjoys sleeping amid wet towels, visitors and plenty of noise. We recommend Mr. Graves.

General Information

When you hear that the diner will be taken off at 7:30 always wait till the last minute to go in and then if you're late you'll have a good excuse to crab all night about being hungry.

General Information

If there aren't enough girls in your own crowd to entertain you look up somebody from outside, preferably cross-eyed.
